A Day Trip to Jamali Kamali

The best education is the one you experience.

At Delhi Public School, Sector 45, we strive to empower young minds through innovative learning experiences. An educational day trip to the Jamali Kamali, a historical site in Mehrauli, New Delhi, was arranged for a group of students of Class V, under the ongoing Jal Itihaas project, being conducted by CEEC (Council for Environment Education and Culture) and INTACH in collaboration with the Itihaas organisation. New Delhi, the capital city of India, is a rich tapestry of history, culture, and architectural marvels. Every corner of the city narrates a unique tale of its rich heritage.

During the visit, the Team Itihaas enthralled students with fascinating stories about Delhi, as the students explored the Jamali Kamali mosque, located within the Archaeological Village complex at Mehrauli. A stunning example of Mughal architecture, the site also reflects Delhi's profound spiritual heritage. The students learned about the reason for the durability of Delhi's ancient structures, some over a century old, which owe their longevity to traditional mortar techniques instead of modern cement.

The highlight of the trip was a visit to an ancient stepwell within the village premises, the 'Rajon ki Baoli'. The Team Itihaas shared fascinating scientific and historical facts about the site while highlighting the importance of water with captivating stories, intriguing facts, and figures making it an enriching excursion for the young explorers. The unique experience not only deepened the students' understanding of history but also instilled a deeper appreciation for the vital role of water in daily life.
